From the Editor - Jason Hefner

As you read this it may be cold again, but the last week weeks have been unreal. The weather has been great and the urge to “go dig in the dirt” has been high I am sure for some of us. As you ponder where to go I want you to think more and more about safety on the dig. A miner was recently killed as he was collecting on his own time and decided he would be fine going into an area that was marked as off limits. There was a collapse and he was killed. I know we usually aren’t underground, but we do collect on hillsides, streambeds, etc. There are dangers everywhere. Please do not enter areas that are marked off. No specimen is worth an injury or even a fatality.

Look for emails about upcoming safety training and take the time to attend a class.

Field Trips: John Davis / Only one of our field trip sites require MSHA certification. Do we as a club want to pursue MSHA training? Following a discussion the membership decided to continue MSHA certification training. Many members go to collecting as individuals.

Kathy Miller reminded the club to sign up for the bus trip to Keokuk in September. To date only 23 members have signed up. Because we need to fill the bus and the block of hotel rooms that have been held for our club, we must set a firm dead line of the April meeting to sign up. If we do not have enough participants, we will have to cancel. Please see Kathy for details.

Historian: Jim Daly has volunteered to be club historian.

American Federation of Mineralogical Societies News

Introducing Myself by Ron Carman, President excerpted from AFMS Newsletter Volume 70, Number 3 – February 2017

In November my wife and I had the privilege of going to the Southeast Federation convention and show in Marietta, Georgia. We did some long driving, visiting nine states in eight days, returning through Little Rock, Arkansas to spend Thanksgiving with my wife's mother. One thing we both noticed was the colorful displays of fall foliage so late in November. The Cobb County Gem and Mineral Society put on a fine show and Friday evening they held a cracker barrel session at their clubhouse, which is located fairly close to both the host hotel and the show site. Excellent job, folks! During the coming year I will try to attend all the federation shows and meet as many members as I can from all the federations. Since I am a do-it-yourself mineral collector, I naturally like to combine field trips with these visits to the various federations. This show location wasn't far from South Carolina, so after the show I made a trip to the Diamond Hill Mine. One member who had been there gave me some advice on what to look for at that mine, and I'm glad to say he was quite correct; I found some nice quartz specimens and even a little amethyst. This is one of the many advantages of federation membership – the ability and willingness to share your experiences and information with others. Now I'm looking forward to visiting the next federation show, which will hopefully be in warmer weather.

Midwest Federation of Mineralogical Societies News President's Message by Tom Whitlatch, MWF President, excerpted from MWF News March 2017 - Issue No. 560

Well, another month has flown by and all the big shows in Arizona have come and gone. I hope those of you that got to go had a great time and found some treasures while you were there.

This month I will continue with what might help your club to make your show great, not only for you, but for the people who come to enjoy it. Their enjoyment began when they came through the door. Now it is up to you to keep them there, for both the dealers and your club.

Remember to mix club displays, demonstrators, and dealers when designing the floor plan. By doing so, everyone gets a slice of the "pie" and your visitors won't get bored. If the club runs the show as a business, and lays out the floor plan accordingly, your show can be profitable to all. One of the reasons we work so hard on our shows is to keep the club going, by making money for club needs and scholarships to students studying geology.

To make money it takes hard work, and wise spending to keep it. A great show is not only financially profitable; it can bring new members full of fresh excitement into the hobby.

Talk to your visitors about the club and "just ask" them to join you at a meeting. You may be surprised at the response.

Conservation & Legislation Committee afmsclc@antelecom.net
excerpted from AFMS Newsletter Volume 70, Number 3 – February 2017

This year will bring new challenges to the Recreational Rockhounding activities across the country. In the west there have been several new National Monuments created which have closed several very good collecting areas to any kind of material removal. There are new fossil collecting rules and regulations being created and implemented by the Public Land Managers of the BLM and USFS that will impact your ability to collect many of the fossils we have enjoyed collecting, owning, sharing and displaying over the years. These new rules may even affect the fossils collected on non-public lands.

The AFMS Legislation and Conservation Committee will strive to keep the Federation members apprised of legislation, rules and regulations that affect the ability to collect and enjoy our natural resources. We will attempt to inform the Federations and their members of new legislation, rules and regulations during the proposal process where each of you will have the ability and the right to voice your opinions and concerns on how these will affect the Recreational Rockhounding Community and your ability to enjoy your hobby. Information will be published in the monthly newsletters, on the Federation Websites and through electronic media where feasible. Again, if you know of any pending legislation, Rules or Regulations that may affect your Recreational Rockhounding activities do not hesitate to contact the AFMS Legislation and Conservation Committee with your concerns and or questions. We can not do this alone, we are only seven and we need all of the eyes and ears for the American Federation of Mineralogical Societies members to help in keeping Recreational Rockhounding a viable Activity. The contact information is: afmsclc@antelecom.net

I look forward to receiving your inputs.
